Research and Reflection in Christian
Health Policy and Practice Worldwide

November 25, 2013

Dear Friends for Christian Global Health,

Countless ministries around the world reach people every single day with life saving care and scientifically verifiable methods to improve health and help transform lives, families, and communities. Christian hospitals and health programs prevent and treat disease or the impact of injuries, and they also directly administer the compassion and mercy of Christ.

Christian health work is a tangible expression of the love of Christ in the world.

We often hope that “success breeds success.” Effective ministries should be able to share their valuable experience with other ministries, influence policy makers, and attract grants and other funding.

Unfortunately that is often not accomplished. Many of those ministries cannot compete with well-resourced, often government-funded programs to get the word out. Research on what works is often left to secular scholars who may ignore the impact of faith-based organizations or fail to consider the impact of the gospel. That is now a real problem as competition for resources is intensifying. Christian organizations know that they must tell their story in credible ways to be funded, or lose out.

The Journal is a new, freely available, peer reviewed, online resource to help get the word out.

Demand for the Christian Journal for Global Health is high as it promises to make credible information available to everybody free of charge. Our advisors and editors cover the world. They will look for projects and contributors. We will help new authors. We will promote best practices. And we will get the word out.

Just because it is available for free does not mean it is free to create.

We invite you to be part of this by prayerfully considering being a founding donor. Any amount helps; individual donations of $1000 or a commitment to donate $2000 over 3 years will make you a “Gold Donor” who will be listed periodically. “Founders” who contribute $5000 or more will be forever remembered in the Journal.

We only need 70 donors giving $1000 in a year or just 58 donors giving $100 a month to meet the annual cost of this journal.

This Christmas season, joy conquers despair as we recognize the tangible love of God expressed by the gift of His Son so that all nations can experience health and wholeness in Him. This Journal can bear witness to health and joy amidst a world wrecked by disease, poverty, war, and disaster. To succeed, we need your help.
